Steen sees move chance

LINCOLN (UPI)—State Game Commission Director Mel Steen said Friday he thinks the legislature will approve having the commission's headquarters relocated outside Lincoln.

Steen's comments came after delegations from six outstate Nebraska communities offered proposals to the commission to move its headquarters to their towns.

"If you decide to move," Steen told the seven - member commission, "I guarantee you the legislature will approve it."

Earlier the Unicameral unanimously passed a resolution to notify the commission that it had better not move "the Game Commission or its activities to any other location without permission from this body."

At the conclusion of its meeting the commission passed a resolution that it would not move its headquarters "without the permission or blessing of the legislature."

The six towns that appeared before the commission were Grand Island, Alliance, Albion, Beatrice, Ord and Lincoln.

Afterwards, Steen said there were three "outstanding offers" which came from Alliance, Grand Island and Ord.

Tax rules needed by divorced parents

Divorced or separated parents planning to claim a child as a dependent on federal income tax returns can avoid possible tax controversy by carefully reading the guidelines.

Richard P. Vinal, district director of internal revenue for Nebraska, said the guidelines should expecially be referred to in cases where divorced or separated parents claim the same child as a dependent.

Generally, the parent with custody of the child for the greater part of the year is entitled to the dependency deduction. There are exceptions of this rule, depending on the terms of the decree and the amount contributed to the child's support by the parent who does not have custody.

This special rule does not apply if someone other than the parents provides over half of the child's support for the year, Mr Vinal said.

Nebraska taxpayers can obtain a copy of the guidelines by sending a postal card to the Omaha Internal Revenue office requesting Publication 501, "Your Exemptions and Exemptions for Dependents." The guidelines are also contained in "Your Federal Income Tax," the 160-page tax guide which sells for 60 cents.

Deputy director named for vehicles

LINCOLN (UPI) — John W. Cerveney of Lincoln has been named deputy director of the State Department of Motor Vehicles effective today.

The appointment was made in a joint announcement by State Motor Vehicles Director Emmett J. Dennis Jr, and Robert P rogers, director of the Department of Administrative Services.

Cerveney, 30, has worked in the Administrative Services Department for the past year as a budget analyst.

He is a graduate of Creighton University and the University of Nebraska, and is a former employe of Champlin Petroleum company and the Lincoln Star.

Protestants are tired, confused

World Of Religion
By LOUIS CASSELS
- - UPI Religion Writer

While the Catholic Church seethes with change and controversy, Protestants are just sitting around with a bad case of the blahs.

So says the Rev. Walter D. Wagoner, a card - carrying Protestant of considerable stature. Dr. Wagoner is director of the Boston Theological Institute.

"We Protestants are tired and confused," he confessed in a recent article in the nondenominational Protestant magazine Christian Century.

Four Things

In a subsequent interview with UPI, Dr. Wagoner listed four things that have helped to bring on the mood of weariness and uncertainty that currently pervades American protestantism.

The first is theological "faddism." A new vogue in theological thought seems to come along about once a year, and everybody jumps on the bandwagon, spouting its esoteric vocabulary and rushing into print with articles and books. He cited the highly publicized but short-lived "Death of God" movement as an example of the bewildering rapidity with which new theological fashions come and go.

Also contributing to Protestant doldrums is a slowdown of the ecumenical movement, which seems to have reached some kind of plateau after two decades of incredibly rapid and dramatic progress.

Low Morale

A third factor is low morale among parish clergy and lay leaders, who've been worn down by repeated assurances from gung-ho reformers that they're wasting their energies on an "obsolete" institution.

The fourth factor in Protestant staleness, he said, is "spiritual malnutrition" resulting from neglect of devotional life. Ministers and laity are so busy being relevant they have little time or inclination for prayer, meditation and Bible study. And without the nourishment of daily devotions, religious activity quickly palls and loses its meaning.

Despite the seriousness of his diagnosis, Dr. Wagoner is optimistic that "Protestant fatigue, like Catholic uproar, may well be a prelude to rebirth."

God's best opportunity to revive his church comes when men realize they're not doing so well on their own, he said. And today there is a growing awareness among Protestants that "we have no direction to go but up."

Cities could levy to build airports

LINCOLN (UPI) — A bill to allow Nebraska's first and second class cities to levy a one mill tax to construct or expand municipal airports was sent to the governor for his signature today by the Unicameral.

The bill was one of three which received final approval, bringing the total passed by lawmakers thus far to 97.

It was sponsored by Sen. Ramey Whitney of Chappell, who said he introduced it at the request of city officials from Ogallala. Whitney said, however, he doubts that Ogallala will make use of the new law right away.

The other bills designate certain "approved" agricultural organizations in the state who may receive state funds in order to promote agriculture and change some laws applying to used car dealers.

The agricultural organizations who wished to have state funds would have to request them from the Legislature.

The law dealing with used car salesmen requires that each used car lot have space for at least 10 cars instead of the present requirement of three.

Campsites are at rest areas

LINCOLN (UPI) —The legislature's Public Works Committee decided Friday to take closer look before acting on a bill to halt camping at State Roads Department highway rest areas.

According to Harold Salter, an attorney for the Roads Department, travelers now use the rest areas, particularly along the Interstate, for campsites.

He said that although the rest areas were not built for this purpose, there is no legal way to prevent people from camping on them.

Under the bill, camping would be permitted only at campsites designated by the department. The committee also amended the bill to include campsites authorized by the State Game Commission.

Also heard for later consideration was a bill which would add 11 miles of gravel road from the Pleasant Dale Interchange south to Highway 33 to the state highway system.

Opposition to the bill came from the State Roads Department which said the matter should be determined by the Highway Advisory Commission with the approval of the governor.

Salter said adding roads to the highway system by special legislation could result in "legislative logrolling."

The committee heard and held a bill which would change the title of the state engineer to director-state engineer.

If you are one of the 1,500 people who received notices from NC Federal Savings and Loan concerning monthly deposits on homes, rest assured the mechanics of the increase will work out.

Savings and Loan says changes in escrow have, in a number of cases, necessitated increasing those monthly deposits to keep the accounts out of the previously too-often, red.

. In effect, S-L officials say that if taxes and insurance stay the same next year, you'll have a surplus.

A new computer accounting system has enables S-L to update those accounts, the fellas say.

The movement of the river ice this year, at least so far, has not been as spectacular as it was a year or two ago when Clayton Graham had his eyes opened by what seemed like an explosion.

This year the temperature rise has permitted smoother thawing. And that should make the farmers pleased. That fast ice movement takes out just about everything in its way and forces lowland flooding.

Someone asked: "How can rescue squadsmen stand the sight of blood and the horror of pain?"

It's pretty tough. Rescue squadsmen are just plain citizens with a little Red Cross training. We always work in pairs. Maybe we need the support of a partner, I don't know.

Many of us often feel like vomiting before starting mouth-to-mouth on a lifeless body or while removing a broken and bent body from the twisted steel of a car.

But, somehow duty beckons more than a wishy-washy stomach.

You really want to know the biggest help?

You!

Rescue squadsmen are grateful to those many unnamed persons who seem to step out of nowhere to lend a helping hand until the squadsmen arrive. They are the true lifesavers.

HANDBAGS FOR MEN once again are trying to make it as a fashion accessory and with the current trends may this year have the best chance. At left is the "Swinger," a his-and-hers pocketbook by Enger Kress. Ten years ago, the purse at right was offered as a French import, but didn't catch on. Wearing a pocketbook is nothing new for men; the style dates back to Classical Greek times, when every self-respecting male carried one. Pueblo inquiry is in recess

CORONADO, Calif. (UPI)— The USS Pueblo Court of Inquiry was in recess today following Cmdr. Lloyd Bucher's tearful exit Friday when a Mexican-American sailor said he survived by "faith in God and my country and faith in my commanding officer."

The 41-year-old Pueblo skipper left the room with wet cheeks while Storekeeper 3.C. Ramon Rosales, 20, of El Paso, Tex., was still at the witness table.

Bucher's attorney, E. Miles Harvey, said the officer was emotionally on edge after five days of listening to his men describing the ordeal of 11 months captivity in North Korea.

Four Pueblo enlisted men and a civilian oceanographer who worked on the vessel when it was captured Jan. 23, 1968; testified before the five admiral court Friday.
