The Buck Ends Here

Stolen from Vern Livingston's desk

"City hall," said the switchboard operator, answering a call There was no sound on the other end of the line.

"City hall," the operator repeated, but still there was no reply

Finally, after the third try, a rather timid female voice said, "Is this really City hall?"

"That's right," said the operator "With whom did you wish to speak?"

There was an embarrassed silence Finally the voice said softly, "nobody, I guess I just found this number in my husband's coat pocket "

Mrs Theresa Meyer, 211 North Fifth Street, a recent patient at St Mary's hospital, wonders if the upcoming generation will ever realize how farmers of yesteryear not only produced food for everyone but also put their own meat on the table

She recalled "butchering" days, when someone in the Avoca neighborhood was the one person farmers relied on to help with butchering livestock.

We had a pleasant visit with Mrs Meyer at the hospital the other day In her years on the farm, the farm wife had many chores she said There was a lot of canning, poultry to care for and raising her sons.

Today, she can enjoy shopping at grocery stores in Nebraska City where the shelves are stocked with literally thousands of staples, meat and dairy products

+ + + + +

Mrs Meyer's years and experiences are before our time, but we enjoyed the visit and recalled such things as milk in glass quart bottles (the top half was cream, it seemed), smoked meats, chicken fried m an iron skillet, the ice man, wood burning stoves (guess who's job it was to carry in the blamed wood), fresh country-baked pies, bread, rolls and homemade butter, churned in a gallon jug with a paddlewheel, picking peas and beans at canning time (guess who had to wash all those blamed quart jars every year) and the job the orneriest boy in the family was handed — taken the frozen wash off the line

+ + + + +

Mrs Meyer enjoys The Buck likes the "oldtime" stories and Mrs Grace Holmes made the day just great with a call of a news item and compliments on The Buck dunno I think you women are pulling my leg er er .haf kaff harrump! You must be up to tricks

Mrs Elmer Conkling asked the other day
Do all those things REALLY happen in your home?
Oh, you bet your velvet pin cushion, they do

Did I ever tell you about the time I came to a decision never to sleep again with my son no matter how much he begged, pleaded and snorted?

It all started in the best of father-son tradition

"Hey, Dad, will you sleep with me tonight?"

Well, it kinda gets you right (thump, thump) here, when the husky little fella says that And so, we decided that despite a rough previous "sleeping with Dad" night, we'd do it again and again Someday, he will be grown and that will be y-u-k.

"You bet your best pocketknife thar boy. The king is going to hit the pad with you tonight I'll out-wrestle you, hog all the covers and snore the loudest "

That really drew a snicker

+ + + + +

Well, we had a lot to talk about, so we didn't settle down right away.

Tootsie, our aging Cocker Spaniel, came into the room several times for some sort of a security check and there was always the blurp-blurp of the aquarium on top of his dresser

we talked about summer when we could "sleep under the stars" while umpteen fish were getting hooked on our throw lines and just waiting for us to get up and haul them in

Once in a while I detected a sudden "thud" in my ribs from a boy's foot

"O-o-m-ph! What in blazes?"

I looked over and all the fire and brimstone, blazing energy and dirty face were gone There beside me was a clean youngster, sprawled out all over the bed in his red and black plaid pajamas .it was the picture of innocence

Suddenly there it was again that big foot

I realized then, that this whole rib-kicking could be blamed on his wrestling coach, Ray Noyes, and all the Jaycees in Nebraska City and the U S A

I never did find out for sure, but I think No 1 son was fighting for the championship of the world with Mr Moto against karate chops, Maddog Vashon or The Claw .and I just happened to be in the same bed

The next morning I couldn't believe it The cyclone of 1932 must have entered the bedroom and grabbed the covers

Omigosh, Millie will flip when she sees the torn sheet

Well, that was about all there was to the night

I lived through it, though I'm not sure how, and the husky little fella feels great about sleeping with dad

We had a couple of fatalities, though.

The next morning we discovered two of his "jumping" fish were missing from the aquarium Remember, I said the aquarium was on the dresser?

Guess where the dresser is located in the bedroom?

Yeah, you've got it .right beside the bed

The 1970 Census revealed that the number of one-person households in the United States was 11.1 million, some 4 1 million or 57 per cent more than in 1960. Two-person households rose to 18 8 million in 1970, an increase of 3 9 million or 26 per cent over the decade The World Almanac notes, however, that increases for larger households were relatively slight.

There have been many claims that tire studs damage paved roads. But if you ask LaVerne Baucke, manager of Stephenson's Liquor Store, 402 South Eleventh Street, they're just as dangerous to buildings expecially when the studs come loose from the tire and start flying. Here Mr Baucke holds a stud that he believes came loose from a tire and cracked the store window.
